“Selecting music that is too hard will cause the teacher to spend too much time teaching the students how to play the right notes instead of how to play the notes right: that is with the correct style and expression.”

-Merle J. Isaac

FJH Beginning Strings (Grade 1 - 1.5)
Appropriate for first year string students. All instruments stay in first position, and optional third violin (viola) parts and piano are included to aid in rehearsal and performance situations.

Real Music for Beginning Strings (Grade 1 - 1.5)
This series includes novelty pieces which are appropriate within the first several months of instruction. Violin 2 parts tend to double the viola, so you don't need to split up your violin section to cover the parts. All pieces come with a piano part to add musical support.

FJH Developing Strings (Grade 2 - 2.5)
Slightly more advanced than Beginning Strings, this series begins to involve more position work and a slightly more complex rhythmic figures. Rehearsal piano is often provided. Ideal for middle school and smaller high school programs.

FJH String Orchestra (Grade 3 and up)
More emphasis on bow technique and independence of lines. For the accomplished middle, high school, college, or professional group.

Items to Consider

Ensemble Considerations

- Teach the students you ACTUALLY have...not the students you WANT
- Consider the strengths & weaknesses of the individuals / ensemble
- Have realistic expectations
- Past behavior...

Sight-Reading Considerations

- If you stop more than 3x – reconsider
- Watch the “back” stands

Items to Consider

Musical Considerations

- Know common issues for Classical era works, slow repertoire, solo/soli, & concerto grossi
- Correct style & articulations often dramatically improves intonation
- Intonation is the “IT”
- Phrasing & expression...not optional

Scheduling Considerations

- Assemblies, winter weather, prom, holidays, state testing, life, days that end in “Y”...
- Short- and long-term objectives

Gauntlet Doug Spata (b. 1975)

Publisher:	Highland/Etling/Alfred
Date of Publication:	1999
Duration:	2:35
Version:	String Orchestra

Unit 1: Composer

American composer Doug Spata (pronounced SPAY-tuh) was born in St. Louis, MO, in 1975. He spent part of his youth in Kandy, Sri Lanka, which sparked a lifelong interest in world cultures that influences much of his music. He is a graduate of the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, and although a clarinetist, his previous career as an orchestra teacher led him to compose primarily for strings. His first published composition was Gauntlet (1999), which continues to be one of his most popular works. Other works for string orchestra include Agincourt, Avatar, Goblin Dance, and Gargoyles.

Unit 2: Composition

Gauntlet is an energetic single-movement work composed in D minor. Although the publisher and several states categorize the work as a Grade 2, some states (e.g., Georgia and Texas) categorize it as a Grade 3 composition. In an interview, Spata states, “[Gauntlet] is the product of a very specific state of mind I was in for two weeks in 1997 when I was listening to equal parts of Shostakovich and Metallica.”¹ Although the title suggests a medieval battle or a test of skill, the piece was written without imagery or a specific story in mind. However, this has not stopped audiences and musicians from interpreting the dramatic themes and transformations in many ways. Spata states: “I think it’s great that Gauntlet inspires peoples’ imaginations; one of the hallmarks of successful art is that it invites a variety of interpretations and I encourage everyone to come up with their own Gauntlet stories.”²

Unit 3: Historical Perspective

Spata composed Gauntlet in 1997 when he was twenty-one years old. Events during that time included United States’ President Bill Clinton and Vice President Al Gore serving a second term in office, and the movie Titanic premiering as one of the most expensive movies of all time, garnering eleven Academy Awards. Rapid growth of orchestra programs across the United States in the 1990s resulted in a boon of original string orchestra compositions. These works explored the harmonic possibilities of G Major, D Major, and C Major—and their relative minor keys—along with a variety of other compositional devices, such as rhythmic variations, contrasting articulations, and extended bowing techniques. Other composers writing music for string orchestra during that time include Elliot del Borgo, Richard Meyer, and Mark Williams.

Unit 4: Technical Considerations

Gauntlet is composed in the key of D minor but occasionally employs B-natural and F-sharp passing tones. String parts are entirely playable in first position except for the double bass part, which also requires half position. Starting on beat three of mm. 15–16 and 31–32, cellos might consider using fourth position to create a more consistent tone color by eliminating the open A string.

Unit 5: Stylistic Considerations

Gauntlet requires staccato quarter notes and spiccato eighth notes—played in the lower half of the bow—to create an energized sound. In contrast, the legato lines in mm. 25–32, 56–77, and 87–90 are enhanced through full bow strokes, appropriate performance of appoggiatura, and vibrato. Bow lifts with a return to the frog are prevalent throughout the piece.

Unit 6: Musical Elements

MELODY:

The primary theme is staccato in nature—occurring first in the violas, then the violins—and should be performed near the frog. The theme contains multiple occurrences of two slurred eighth notes, with the second note containing a staccato marking. Treat this rhythm as an appoggiatura by making the second note shorter and softer. At m. 10, the cellos develop the first measure of the primary theme, mirroring the style of the violins and violas. At m. 56, the lyrical secondary theme begins in the violas before moving to other sections. The style of the secondary theme demands a fast, light bow to create a singing quality. Written dynamics enhance phrasing while also bringing out melodic lines.

194

HARMONY:

The D minor key remains throughout Gauntlet except for a temporary tonal shift to G minor during the lyrical middle section. B-naturals and F-sharps appear as melodic passing tones throughout the piece. Warm-up exercises involving both harmonic and melodic forms of D minor and G minor scales will assist students with fingering patterns and intonation.

RHYTHM:

The rhythmic vocabulary is limited; however, syncopation in m. 11 and weak-beat entrances in mm. 41 and 42 are potentially troublesome. The 4/4 meter and half note = 80 tempo indication imply the composer likely desired an occasional macrobeat feeling of playing in 2/2 meter, perhaps most beneficially during the lyrical middle section. In the composer's own words: "Rushing the tempos is disrespectful to the composer because it misrepresents his or her work and to the audience because it's denying them a meaningful concert experience. I put metronome markings on all my scores, and I want them to be heeded."³

TIMBRE:

The composer asks for a dark and energetic performance of Gauntlet. The key of D minor naturally provides darkness, but playing staccato motifs at the frog will enhance the energetic quality of the performance. Specifically, quarter notes in the cello and double bass accompaniment lines should be played staccato near the frog, and in mm. 9–16, repeated eighth notes in the viola part should be played spiccato near the frog. In contrast, the lyrical middle section should incorporate vibrato, a relaxed bow hand, and a fast bow speed balanced with light bow arm weight.

Unit 7: Form and Structure

Form: A–B–A'

SECTION	MEASURE	EVENT AND SCORING
A	1–9	After a one-measure introduction by cellos and double basses, the primary theme is stated first in violas, then in violins over a staccato quarter-note ostinato in cello and double bass parts.
	10–16	The opening motif is used by cellos and double basses as a transition back to the primary theme, driven by spiccato eighth notes in violas.
	17–24	The primary theme returns in violins.

SECTION	MEASURE	EVENT AND SCORING
	25–32	Cellos present a staccato secondary theme accompanied by a lyrical harmonization in violins and violas.
	33–40	The primary theme returns in violins.
	41–47	A transition features stretto in violas and violins.
	48–55	A transition features cellos, then violas, in a development of the first three notes of the melody.
B	56–79	A lyrical contrasting section occurs in which the moving lines should be brought to the forefront; the melody starts in violas and then moves between sections.
A'	80–86	The primary theme returns in violins.
	87–94	The secondary cello melody returns.
	95–end	Final statement of the melody by second violins and cellos followed by a closing cadence, which is emphasized by consecutive down bows in all parts.

Unit 4: Technical Considerations

American Sketches is demanding from start to finish because of its rapid tempo, syncopations, independence, and mixed meter. Each theme includes offbeat accents, hooked bowings, and a combination of articulations. Students must have the capability to perform these bowings and switch between them fluidly.

The work is written in C Major, but it moves between G Major and D Major. Unison melodies, perfect fifths, and seventh chords may pose an intonation challenges for some players. All students need comfort when shifting and playing rapidly descending scales, trills, arpeggios, and octaves. The first violin part ascends to a B6 in the waltz, although the majority of the work occurs in first through third positions. The second violin part lays entirely in first position. The viola part uses first and third positions. The cello part requires players to use all positions up to sixth, and the solo cellists must also play in thumb position. The double bass part uses first through fifth positions.

Unit 5: Stylistic Considerations

Two distinct bowing styles are required in this arrangement of Russian and Ludmilla. Short staccato bow strokes are required for the rapid scale passages and for excerpts in the first theme. The ability to quickly transition between bow strokes is a necessity due to slurs and various articulations that occur within the running eighth-note sections. Adding dynamics to the fast-paced scale passages by following the notes' contour will also keep the piece energetic. A legato and connected bow stroke is needed for the lyrical passages. For the second theme to reach its musical potential, players must perform the melodic lines in a fluid manner with expressive vibrato. That ability occurs by learning to control the amount of weight transferred into the bow through the player's right hand, the bow's speed, and the contact point. Musicians must also have the ability to control bow speed when performing hooked bowings to avoid rushing the tempo. Quick transitions between pizzicato and arco are a must!
